High school students take over the music scene

“ I always liked to sing since I was 6. Then in elementary school, I had two friends who played an instrument. One played the drums and the other played guitar. They were just messing around, and one day I just felt like singing, and my friend told me that singing could go well with playing guitar. When I was 13, I started playing guitar and then moved to Pennsylvania. I did not have many friends, so everyday would be the same routine: go home and play guitar for the rest of the day. All I had was a little book that taught me a few chords and songs. From there it just developed into song writing and recording. And as time went by, I got less shy and let more people listen to my music.”

“ We’re really big on Blink-182, Four Year Strong, and The Wonder Years. We also get inspired from like feeding off the silliness of each other. It’s a train wreck. We don’t release any music that we don’t all like. Our music is fun. That’s the point of it. We don’t take ourselves seriously at all; it’s all for a good time. The thing is, if we aren’t having fun, then there’s no way that the crowd will be.”
